“ My son was the light of my life. He was not just my son, he was also my best friend. We could call each other at all times of the night and talk. I will miss those precious times but I know I will one day see him on the other side of the veil. Sleep in peace my precious child. You touched so many people’s lives by your compassion, love and presence, even the lives of the people who were followers of your Discord/Youtube/Newgrounds and X. Your sons will know the man who was loved both by those who knew him and most importantly the people who only knew of you through your work. The tributes and testimonies of your followers will forever be a testimony of your character. I will forever miss you my son, until we meet again.

The Jones Who Said...
For me, he is more than "a guy who makes some cool games" because of his and his projects, young Wendell (me) started learning English so he could continue in FFSX, and along with that, I developed an immense passion for RPGs. If I speak English today, it's because of him.

Had to take a time to come here and pay my respects as well. BDK will always be remembered. My childhood was amazing with FFX, it made me get know FMA because of the FFXS intro. Growing up as a kid in Brazil with a low quality internet at the time was way easier thanks to the amazing games I've got to play in flash. My sentiments to the family.

happy to revisit his work on what he published out to so many peoples childhood. I was so curious on what happened to him that I actually joined this server that same week to see that he had a family and was even working on the newer episode. I was so hella excited. And now my friend told me about the news a second ago and I'm just in tears. I

Final Fantasy Sonic X6 and it was so good, today I'm 18 and a few months ago I remembered that Sonic flash game, after a few research I found the game and when I played again, it was as good as it was 12 years ago.
FFSX and some other Sonic Flash games are one of the reasons I'm a N6 Sonic fan today. It was great
